FAMILY NOTES FOR...
ARNOLD BUHR ALIAS WILLIAM ADAMS

Family speculation has it that both William and Margaret were of German descent and were born or lived in Australia some time before migrating to New Zealand. It is also speculated that they changed their German Surnames (Buhr and Ihlein have been mentioned) to Adams somewhere between Australia and New Zealand. My interest is to compile the facts as I see them and hopefully clear up this mystery for this Kaihu family with a long term view of adding this to my Kaihu Valley History Journals. With family permission granted of course...

They were both born in Australia as referenced by their sons military records and came out to New Zealand and straight to Kaihu about 1894 where they were storekeepers. Some say they lived at Aratapu first...

After about ten years trading they put their store on the market at Kaihu and bought a large spread at modern day Aranga or as it were known then as the Waima Valley...

They must have had money to be able to travel out from Australia and then set up the Store at Kaihu Lock Stock and Barrel...It is also possible they had relations living here...In 1920 a 'James W Adams' was living at Kaihu He was a Blacksmith aged 45 he had nine children...could this have been John brother of Arnolds???

Did you know that Arnold Buhr was a Baker in 1888 to 1893 ...owned Woolwich bakery Woolwich Road Hunters Hill NSW.

A 'John Buhr' who was possibly a brother was a Cooper in 1888 -1893 plus his wife was a storekeeper in Leichhardt and Glebe.

Both are gone from the NSW Sands directory after 1893 when I think they both immigrated to NZ.

It is possible they also lived at Dargaville or surrounds. One child was born at Toka Toka 1894. Another 1895 Dargaville...

Were Storekeepers at Opanaki/Kaihu 1895-1905?

1905-Probably settlers at Donnelly's Crossing

Arnold was born in Germany

Josephine burnt all her photos including those from Germany

Both Lillian and Josephine said in the past that Arnold their Dad left Aussie for New Zealand because he was a bootlegger and had the law disagreeing with his money earner...

Note: Neckarsulm German pronunciation: [nɛkar'zʊlm]) is a city in northern Baden-Württemberg, Germany, near Stuttgart, and part of the district Heilbronn. As of 2004, Neckarsulm had 27,296 inhabitants.

The rivers Neckar and Sulm join there, hence the name, which is often misunderstood or mispronounced as "Neckars Ulm", an incongruity which would mean the Ulm of the Neckar, as the city of Ulm is well to the East on the Danube at the border between Baden-Wuerttemberg and Bavaria.

Neckarsulm is famous for being ranked first in the German Solarbundesliga (cities beginning at 10,000 inhabitants), a competition in renewable energy installations. Its other fame is that the Neckarsulm-Gundelsheim Weingartnergenossenschaft (vintner's co-operative) is reputed to be the oldest in Germany; trollinger and lemlberger are the principal varieties of grape that are grown.

THE MINISTER FOR LANDS.

MR. McNAB'S NORTHERN TOUR

(By Telegraph.—Special Reporter.)

DARGAVILLE, Wednesday

The Ministerial party left Rawene early this morning for Dargaville; the first two or three hours being in an oil launch up the distinctly pretty Taheke stream to the small settlement of that name. Then the road was once more resumed for a long and rough drive of fifty miles from Kaihu, and the change from the smoothly gliding launch to the bone-rattling road was not made with great eagerness; but needs must when circumstances drive. The route for the first twelve or fifteen miles was a long climb over the dividing range of the Hokianga and Kaipara, and from the summit a beautiful prospect of the fertile little Waima Valley opened out. The route led nearly the whole way through heavy timber country. As we approached Kaihu evidences of the vanishing kauri were large on every side. A very short stoppage was made for lunch, and the greater part of the afternoon was spent in passing partially-burnt clearings. As Kaihu was neared, some splendid glimpses were obtained of the surrounding country, and at the Kauri Park reserve a short halt was called to inspect the charred remains of the recently-destroyed giant. Some dozen trees altogether have been burnt of this scenic spot, which within a very few years will be the sole surviving remnant of the great forest still existing at the entrance of Hobson County. The Minister was met by Mr. F. J. Dargaville (chairman of the County Council), and Mr. V. Trounson (member for the Riding), and escorted to the township. Kaihu was reached shortly after 5 p.m., and after hearing a few deputations, a special train was boarded for Dargaville, the day's objective, about half-past six, seeing the party safely landed after one of the heaviest days of the tour.

KAIHU DEPUTATIONS.

Shortly before the kauri forest was reached a deputation of local settlers waited upon the Minister with a request that certain sections next the Waipuna State Forests should be re-opened for selection.

Mr. McNab promised to lay the matter before the Auckland Waste Land Board.

Mr. McNab promised to lay the matter before the Auckland Waste Land Board.

At Kaihu a number of requests were placed before the Minister, the speakers being introduced by Mr. Stallworthy, M.H.R. for the district. Mr. Gaze, who represented the Kaihu branch of the Liberal and Labour Federation, opened matters by urging the throwing open of more lands in the district. He urged that although there was a large acreage of good land in the vicinity, there was at the present time none available for settlers who desired land. Another matter brought forward was the re-opening of forfeited blocks in the Mangatu survey district. He further urged the division of Crown lands into six classes, instead of three, as at present, as the range in the quality of land, locally, at all events, was so great that a classification was desirable.

Mr. W. Adams brought forward the question of extending the railway from Kaihu. From some unforeseen circumstances the last piece of railway construction on this line was not completed. The present railway had been one of the best paying ones in the colony, and there was no room for doubt that a similar result would follow the construction of the extension. Another matter introduced was the subject of Government paying towards the cost of fencing Crown lands, when the boundaries reached private property. Crown tenants, it was stated, were themselves under great handicap, owing to their cattle and horses roaming off their land, because the boundaries reaching Crown lands were not to be fenced. The deputation also represented to the Minister the fact that large quantities of forest reserves, many of them leased to timber companies, were now cleared of marketable timber, and lying unused, it was urged that the timber companies should in these companies be asked for the surrender of the right of lease, so that the land might become available for settlement.

The Minister, in replying, said that in regard to the State forest reserves he had no doubt that if the case was as represented, a movement would be made for remedying the matter. He was of opinion that a grave difficulty would be experienced in having so many as six classes of land. Respecting the railway extension, although it was true that no new construction was authorised, he realised that the position was different respecting the Kaihu Extension, so he would convey their representations to his colleague, the Minister for Public Works. He did not think that Cabinet in any case would agree to paying half the cost of boundary fences on Crown lands. He would not make any definite statements, but it might be possible for something to be done to meet the settlers somewhat in this matter. As to the timber leases, no doubt the companies would be reasonable, and some satisfactory arrangements could be arrived at to meet the case.

SPEECH AT DARGAVILLE.

In the evening Mr McNab addressed a large public meeting in the Dargaville public hall. The Chairman of the County Council, Mr Dargaville, presided. The Minister was loudly applauded when rising to speak, and throughout was listened to with deep attention.

His speech was largely along the lines of previous addresses. Among the matters touched upon were the increase of expenditure on land by the Government for settlement purposes, and the power of the Minister for Lands on that point. He pointed out that as Minister for Lands he had power to borrow £500,000, with which to obtain privately-owned land in order to sub-divide it for settlement, without any responsibility to Parliament. Probably no other Minister of the British Crown possessed such powers. Up to March last, over four and a-half million pounds had been borrowed with which to buy land for settlement. Over and above what was owned by the Crown. Land which some years ago was sold at £2 and £3 per acre, was being bought at £16 and £18 per acre for settlement purposes. Mr McNab spoke of the comparative fertility of Canterbury and Auckland lands, which produced no more in the genial climate of the north than did the southern lands. As for the fertility of North Auckland lands, he had seen some of it but recently, but so far the satisfactory dealing with that country had baffled every Minister.

Immediately upon the Minister resuming his seat, which he did amid loud applause, Mr Richard Monk rose in the audience and remarked that he was going to take the very unusual course of asking them to thank the Minister for Lands very heartily for his speech, but would like to add a few criticisms, although the time was short. He entered very deeply into his subject, mounting the platform amid some uproar, cheers, and loud encouragements being mostly in evidence. Mr Monk went on to say that as a representative of the Farmers' Union he knew something of the land tenure and toil upon the land. (Applause, and voice, "what about the three bob a day?") He agreed entirely about the reduction of large estates ("hear, hear"), but with regard to the leasehold he was confident in moving as an amendment, "that in the opinion of this meeting representing the people of this district, it is considered that all leases of Crown agricultural land shall include the freehold tenure ("hear, hear"), and also that the option shall be available after improvements have been made at the convenience of the lessee; also that in the opinion of this meeting the freehold tenure, which has been so popular and successful in the settlement of this country, is the best in history, shall be continued, and posterity intact and untrammelled as the very best tenure of land." (Loud applause and cheers.) Mr Monk then began to explain his attitude when the chairman interfered, remarking that the hall that night had been engaged for the Honourable the Minister for Lands, and that if he (Mr Monk) persisted to address the electors he was at liberty to engage the hall himself. He must, therefore, ask him to keep to the motion, so that it might be duly put. ("Hear, hear.")

Mr Monk: "I wish to explain that I consider, as being of vital importance,

The Chairman: "You must either keep to the motion or retire."

Mr. Monk: "Very well, I will confine myself to the motion." Addressing the audience, Mr. Monk then went on to say that the freehold was the backbone of individual independence, and inseparable from that love of liberty which was engrafted in every free man. That it fostered a spirit of true liberalism, and was the greatest link between the people and the homestead. It inspired them with a love for their country, and with all the higher qualities that went to make men. (Applause and laughter.)

to make men." (Applause and laughter.)

The chairman again rose to order, asking the speaker to bring his remarks to a close, as the Minister had to attend a banquet.

Mr. Monk retorted that they were sitting, and that the Minister at all events was a younger man than he.

The Chairman: "Mr. Monk, if you don't leave the platform I will ask the police to remove you." (Uproar.)

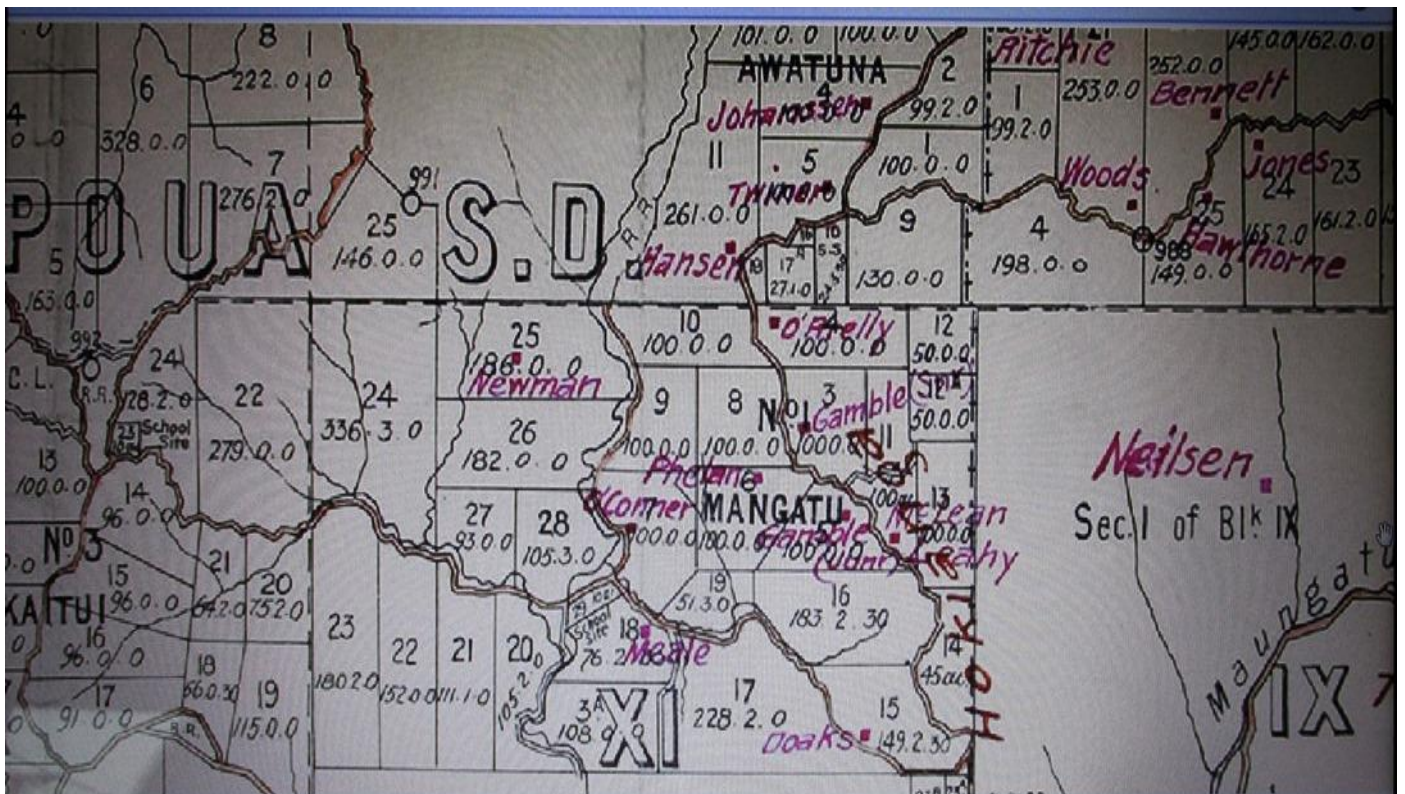

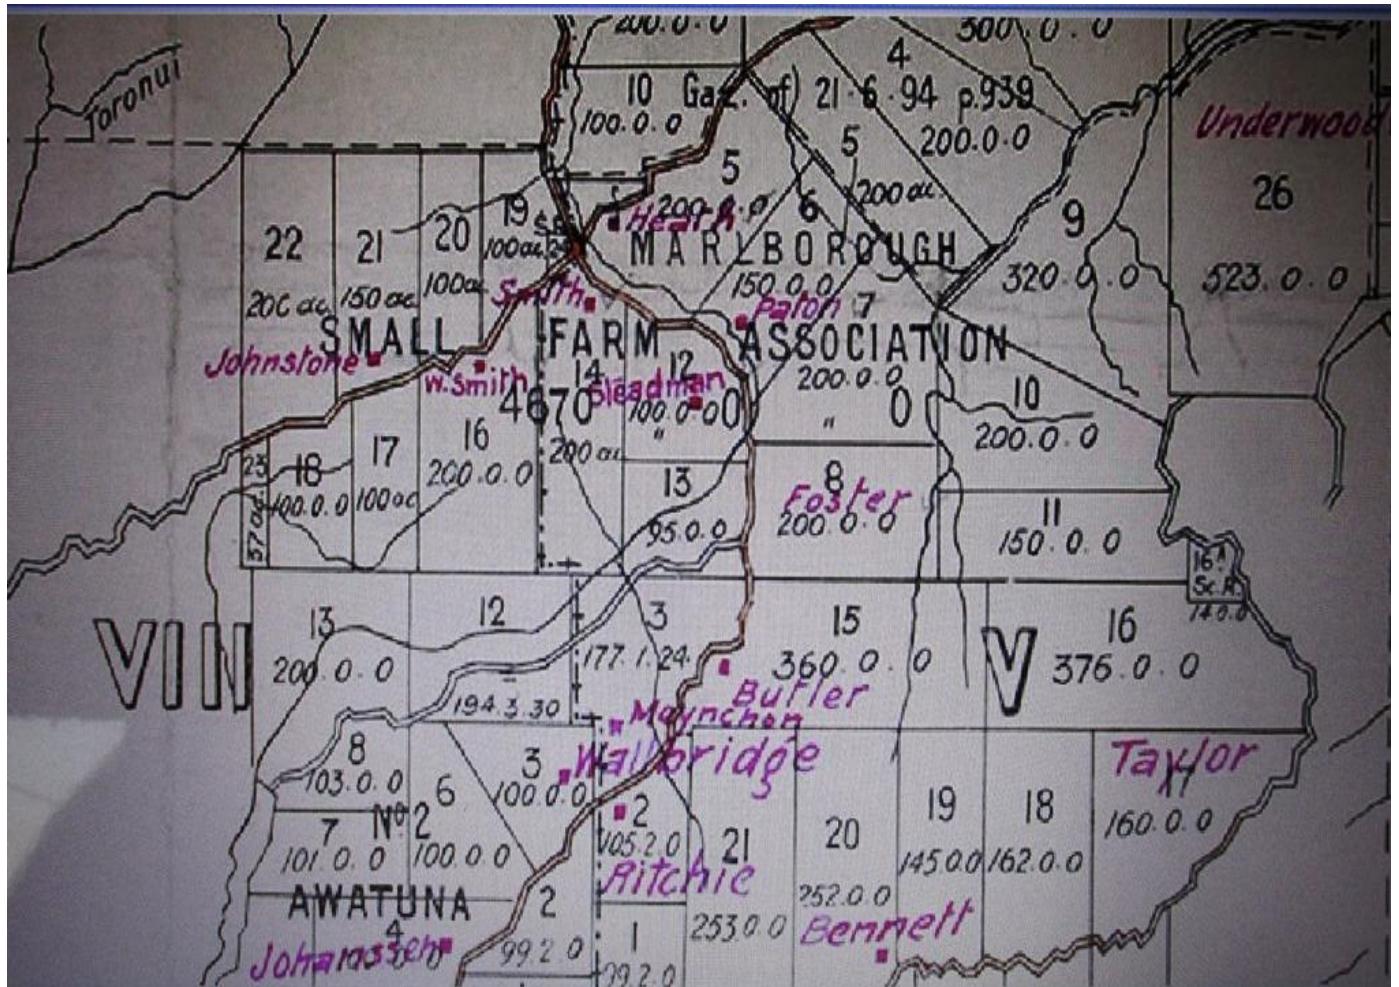

Mr. Monk, still protesting, then retired, amid confused cheers and interjections, whereupon Mr. A. E. Harding rose and seconded the amendment, remarking in doing so that he had met Mr. McNab when he (the speaker) represented that district in Parliament, and he had always found him a right good fellow, but he had made one remark that night, referring to the man who refused the 90 per cent concession, as being a man who would take nothing, which was absolutely wrong. He then proceeded to point out that the lease in perpetuity holder had every right to claim, if he so desired, the absolute freehold of his land. He also challenged the Minister's remark respecting the position of the House on the subject of original and present values, contending that the members were not returned on the present land proposals, but on the homestead system, which was the policy of the late Premier. The present bill, he maintained, was not what it seemed, but at the back of it was a single tax, and land nationalisation. (Cries of "That's right." and "No! No!")

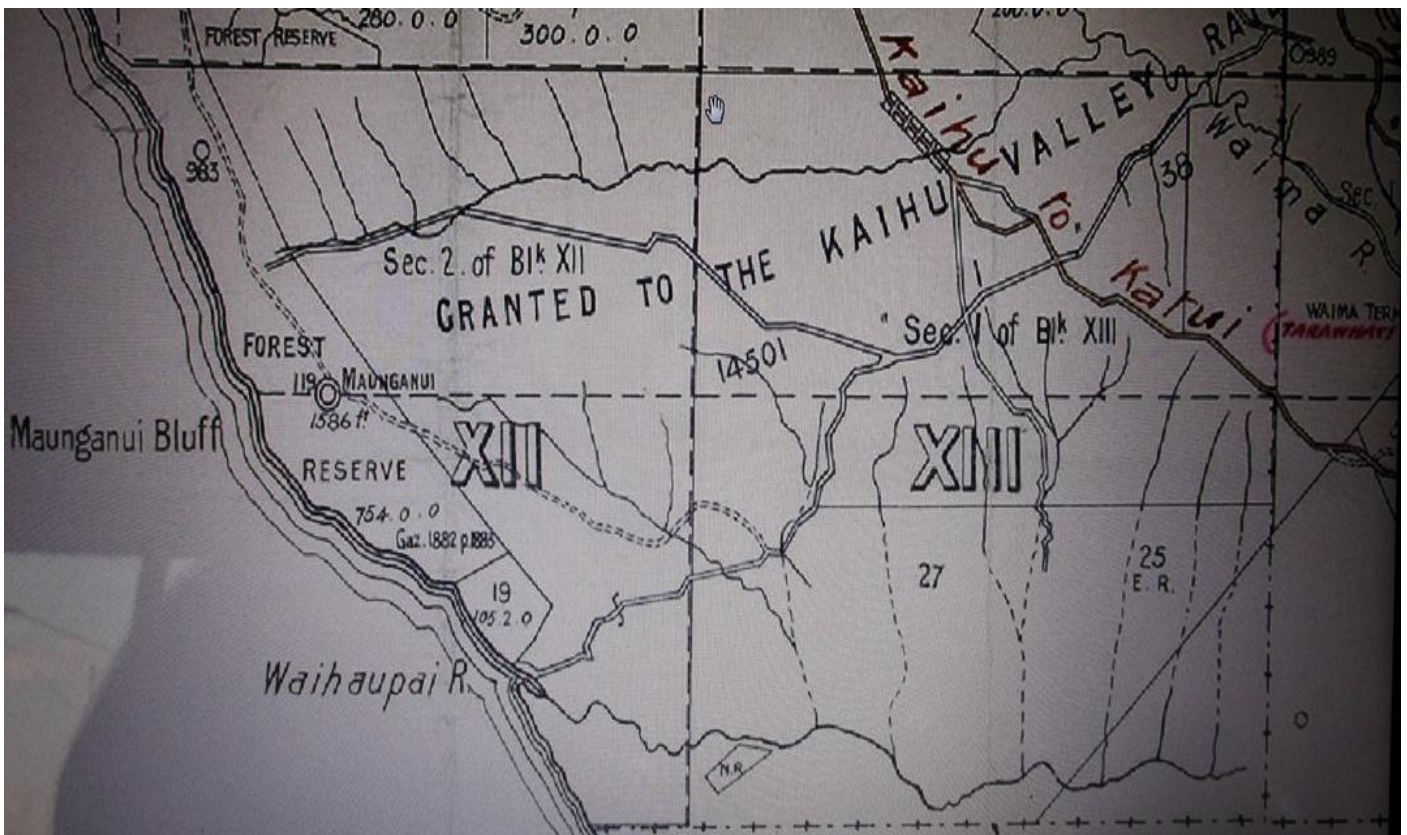

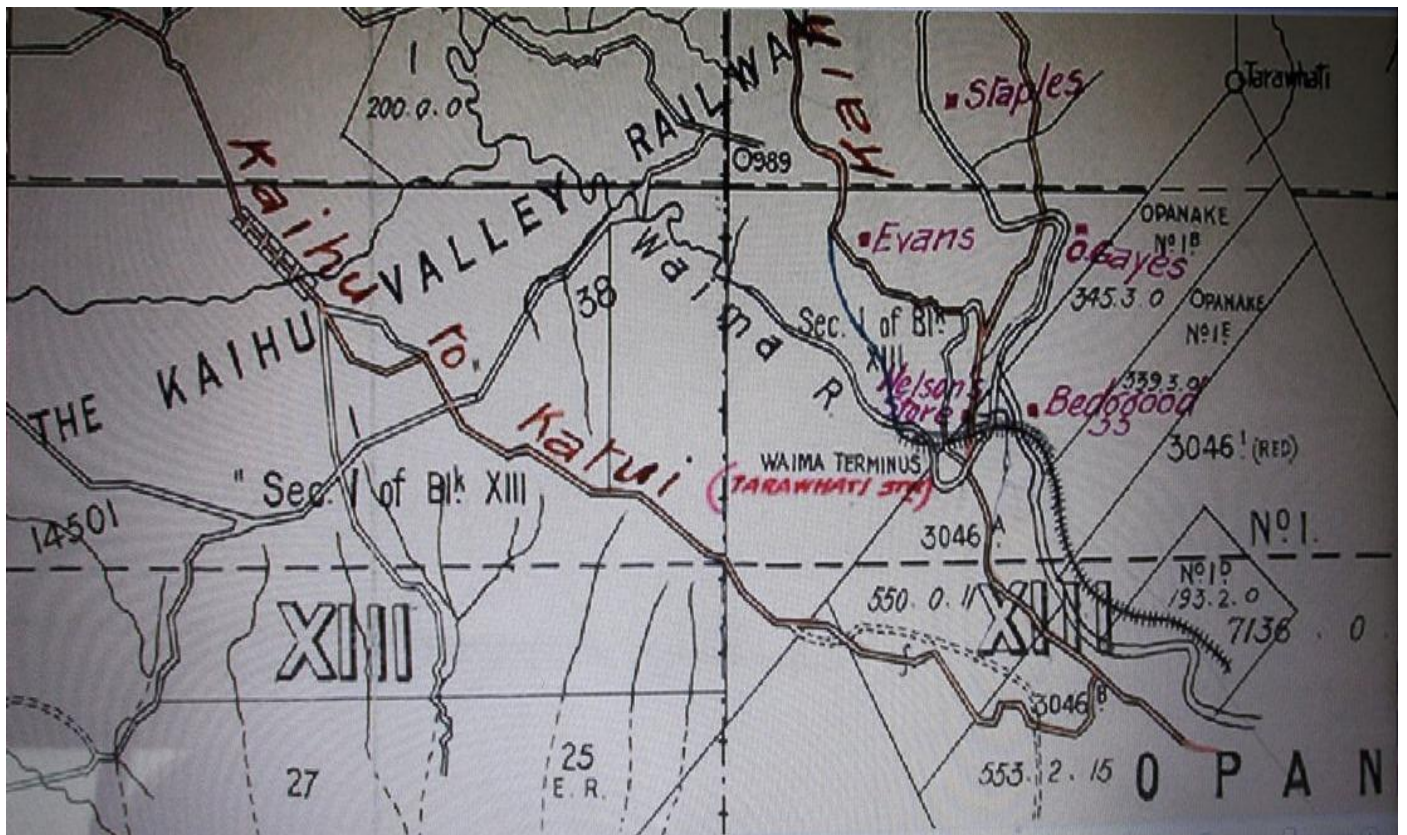

Mr. Webb then moved an amendment, that the Minister be heartily thanked for his address, and that the meeting approve of his principle for the limitation of large estates, and also express its entire sympathy with the proposals respecting endowment for old age pensions, charitable aid and educational purposes. (Applause.) Mr. Webb said he was a freeholder to the backbone, but after looking at the bill in every possible way, he could not discover anything in it to make him vote against it. They all knew very well also that the Hon. Minister was not a single-taxer. (Applause.)

Mr. Moorehead seconded the amendment, which, on being put, however, was lost by a majority of 3 to 1, the motion being declared carried amidst long applause and cheers.

Following upon the meeting, the Minister was entertained at supper by the Hobson County Council, the chairman (Mr. F. J. Dargaville) presiding. Early in the morning the Minister of Lands and party left for Pahi, via Raupo and Tokatoka. On Friday the Bickerstaffe settlement will be visited, and on Saturday night Auckland will be reached by way of Helensville.

I have often heard over the years about the existing Kaihu Hotel being sledded and pulled by bullocks down to its existing position from the top of the Kaihu hill. In reality part of this hotel could have been the Waima accommodation house or Hotel at Aranga which was refused a license in 1899 the same time as Kaihu was issued theirs. But from my research most of the Kaihu Hotel was built from scratch with local timber by Hancock and Company about 1898-99. I think the confusion comes with the moving of the original Rikihana Hall from near the railway line to the Marae on Woods Road. This could have been done on sled and moved by bullocks...it is still there today...

Note: The decision to have a Hotel License at Kaihu was very controversial and the issue became a political and religious football.

From my knowledge there were several sly grogger's in the district supplying to gum diggers, railway workers, timber workers and all others. There would have been a ready and available market.

Once the Hotel was built with its new Hotel License issued in 1899 these sly grogger's would have immediately become competition to the legalised premises and so the area would now have been heavily policed to stop the illegal trade: consequently these chaps who were supplying pre 1899 were closed down: they then moved into other avenues of income such as farming.

EARLY HISTORY RELATED TO THESE FAMILIES

(Compiled by Roger Mold)

OPANAKI BECOMES KAIHU

(Opanaki-to throw a net)

On the east and west bank of the Kaihu River

Approximately, 23 km by rail from Dargaville

Maori Village: Timber Town

Marae's, Native School, Public School

Rugby fields, Rail Station, Post Office, and Stock yards

Shops, Churches, Public Halls, Timber Mill, Hotel, and Farming

Note: From old knowledge the name Kaihu has been used as a general term for the whole of the Kaihu River district and also for the location of Dargaville as it is today. Whapu was also used to name this location at the mouth of the Kaihu River being on the East bank with Mangawhare on the West.

The Kaihu village as we know it today was originally known as Opanaki/e with the main Village or Pa on the east bank. The settlement of Ahikiwi and Taita just south was also referred to as Kaihu and so this makes it very hard to actually pin point the exact area's from the old recorded knowledge.

It seems it was easier to write the word 'Kaihu' for all related areas along the river than to try and write the village names as they sounded in Maori,

The Central Hotel in Dargaville was originally known as the Kaihu Hotel.

The name Kaihu was changed to Dargaville by the New Zealand Education Board.

The rail reached Opanaki February 1889.

The school was renamed Kaihu from Opanaki in 1900.

This was also changed to its present form by the New Zealand Postal service and the Board of Education as it clashed with the Opunake in Taranaki.

MAORI LAND COURT

We shall now look briefly at attempts to get legal titles to the Kaihu, Opanaki and Waimata blocks by the local Maori as in effect these were trial runs for the purchase of the Waipoua and Maunganui blocks by the crown 1876...

In February 1871, a claim for a 43,700 acre block of land in the Kaihu valley, was brought in to the Kaipara court by Parore Te Awha, and contested by Tiopira Kinaki. There was no doubt in the mind of the court that the land belonged to the descendants of Toa, and a certificate of title was awarded to Tiopira Kinaki, Te Rore Taoho, Parore Te Awha and seven others, and a list of 66 names registered under the Native Lands Act 1867.

In 1873 the Opanake block of 14,457 acres was investigated and Te Rore Taoho and Parore Te Awha were named as owners to represent the Hapu. They then leased timber rights to a Sash and Door company for 2000 pounds for a period of 50 years. Tiopira also contested Parore's claim to the Waimata block, which the court awarded to Parore in 1875.

These early contests between Parore Te Awha and Tiopira and/or Te Rore Taoho in the Native Land Court were a continuation of traditional rivalries and warfare between Ngapuhi and Te Roroa. They were fought to establish mana and to share in a valuable source of new wealth in the new market economy, rather than to sell the land to Europeans. Although only ten or fewer people were named on the titles, from a Te Roroa perspective they were representatives of the Hapu, not absolute owners. As yet Te Roroa did not fully appreciate that the ten owner system would disinherit all those whose names were not included.

About 1876 most of these large tracts of land was purchased by the crown and then on sold to emerging European business men. A more detailed account can be read in the Journal 'Land Deals' which has now been added to the webpage...www.kaihuvalleyhistory.com

FIRST NATION PEOPLE

Note: It is very evident that this area between the Kaipara and the Hokianga Harbours from about 1795 until after the death of Hongi Hika 1828 was sparsely populated by Maori with just small Hapu/Clans living at Waimamaku, Waipoua and in the Kaihu Valley. This I contribute to two factors...

1: The warring factions between Ngati Whatua (who came from outside around 1700) and Ngapuhi proper from the Hokianga and Bay of Islands.

After the battle at Moremonui on the West Coast South of Omamari in 1807 between these two tribes, and the near annihilation of the Ngapuhi 'Taua' or war party with Hongi Hika witnessing the deaths of his two half-brothers and his sister, Hongi swore to avenge his people and from that day he pledged to claim Utu on Ngati Whatua in the future.

Revenge was completed by Ngapuhi at Te Ika a Ranganui 1825 with Ngati Whatua scattering before the North winds into the Southern country. And so up until about 1830, we had Ngati Whatua or those who were left after the revenge taken on them by Hongi of Ngapuhi about 1825, living in small groups South of the Kaipara with some of these people moving back into the North Kaipara area slowly after the death of Hongi in 1828.

Hongi Hika was generally happy with the coming of the European and would have passed his thoughts on to Te Tirarau and Parore Te Awha, the two main chiefs for the Northern Kaipara to Hokianga area, who were by and large affiliated with Ngapuhi and by this time their Mana or power was well established at Waipoua and Tangiteroria:

2: Introduced diseases by those first Europeans: These would have been spread by the first sealers and whalers as they came into the Bay of Islands to replenish their supplies as they mingle with the local people and then compounded by other cultures as they came to cash in on New Zealand's natural resources...

RESERVED MEETING OF CULTURES...

1842: THOMAS SPENCER FORSAITH, AT MANGAWHARE

In 1838 Thomas Forsaith chartered the Coromandel loaded it with trade goods and lumber making machinery, and immigrated to New Zealand. In 1839 he purchased two blocks of land in the Kaipara district and established a trading station at Mangawhare on the Northern Wairoa River. He also erected a mill to cut kauri spars (then selling at £17 each) for the British Government, and imported cattle and farm implements to break in his land. By May 1841 he had cleared and fenced 12 acres, of which 10 acres were sown in wheat. In February 1842, while Forsaith and his wife were visiting Sydney, a Maori skull was discovered on his property. Local chiefs claimed that a tapu had been broken and exacted utu, or payment, by plundering the station. Forsaith petitioned Governor Hobson for compensation. The claim was investigated by George Clarke the Protector of Aborigines. His report cleared Forsaith of complicity, and the chiefs responsible agreed to cede him a small block of land (10 square miles) by way of settlement. This was the first occasion on which Government Officers had visited the district and Clarke made valuable recommendations concerning the establishment of magistracy there.

NORTHERN WAIROA: MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES.

WEDNESDAY last was a bright day here in every respect; bright with its splendid weather and glowing sunshine, making even our muddy river look as bright and smiling as though it had been washed and cleansed from all its impurities; bright with an unwonted display of all the displayable bunting, and bright also with the animated and expectant faces of Europeans and natives, who, dressed in holiday attire, congregated at Mangawhare, the residence of M. Marriner, Esq. This unusual scene was called forth from the fact that this was the appointed day for the marriage of Mr. William A. Marriner to Miss Mary Douglass, the daughter of William Douglass, Esq., of Rosevale, one of our most energetic and highly respected settlers. Early in the morning Mr. W. Marriner, accompanied by Parore, the oldest and most influential chief in the district, and European friends, steamed down the river in the steam launch 'Elsie,' which had been kindly placed at their disposal by Mr. Frazer, of the Kaihu Flax-mills, to the residence of the bride's father, where the marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. F. Gould. The wedding breakfast was then partaken of, and the usual toasts were given and enthusiastically drunk; after which, Mr. Douglass proposed "The health of the chief Parore." He was glad to welcome to his house so influential a chief, who had always been so conspicuous for his loyalty to her Majesty, and for his desire to promote peace and settlement, and friendly relations between the Europeans in this part of the realm, and the people over whom he held rule. He was especially pleased to part of the realm, and the people over whom he held rule. He was especially pleased to see that he took such an interest in Mr. Marriner's family, particularly in his (Mr. Douglass's) new son-in-law; and he trusted he would extend to his young daughter, now leaving the paternal roof, that kindness he had always shown to her husband, Mr. Marriner.—Parore, in responding, said: This was the first time he was present at an English wedding; he had always taken a deep interest in Mr. Marriner's family. He felt for Mr. William Marriner such affection as a father felt for his well-beloved son, and come weal or woe he should never change towards him. He felt proud and happy at the confidence reposed in him by Mr. Douglas, and he would so far as lay in his power be the guardian and protector of the fair young bride before him, whom he would be delighted to welcome to her new sphere. He had always been a loyal subject of her Majesty the Queen, in proof of which he could say that he now possessed three flags, presented to him by as many of her representatives in this country. He trusted that the present friendly relations between Europeans and Maoris in the North would never be interrupted; it was his intention always to be the guardian of all his loyal European neighbours.—After the breakfast the bridal party proceeded up the river in a gaily-decorated whale-boat, towed by the 'Elsie.' Their arrival at Mangawhare was greeted by the loud acclamations of the English, and the still louder ones of the Maoris, who, numbering about 250, rent the air with their shouts of "Haere mai, na haere mai, te hunga Marena." On landing bering about 250, rent the air with their shouts of "Haere mai, na haere mai, te hunga Marena." On landing the natives welcomed them with a war-dance, and the more than energetic manner in which it was executed showed the high estimation in which Mr. Marriner was held by the natives. After sunset a dance of another kind took place in one of the large sheds, which evergreens, flowers, flags, lights, &c., had transformed into a sort of "Arabian Nights" scene, which was heightened by the gay dresses and smiling faces of the ladies assembled. Outside the door, and peeping through every available point of vision, were assembled crowds of admiring Maoris; and, if the pakeha style of dancing did not appear to be quite so demonstrative as theirs, it must have been to those engaged therein quite as exhausting. The evening was frightfully hot: notwithstanding this, dancing was kept up with great spirit till "morning's rosy blush illumed the eastern sky," when, as a winding-up, Sir Roger de Coverley was joined in by all present. Next day, Thursday, a feast was given to the natives assembled at Mangawhare, in honour of the occasion. About mid-day, a huge "four-storeyed" wedding cake was borne out of Mr. Marriner's house on the shoulders of four stalwart natives, followed by a procession of about 100 Maoris, marching two-and-two, and headed by the chief Wynyard. The cake was taken out, and set down on a platform, the crowd forming a circle around it: the bride then walked up and formally cut it, when 300 such cheers went up from 300 throats as it has seldom been our lot to listen to. Wynyard then made a speech: He said they were met at the wedding of Mr. William Marriner, the son of one of the oldest European residents. He supposed there were some present who had tasted the wedding cake of his father, Mr. Matthew Marriner. They, with the rising generation, must now eat of this cake, and he hoped that, if the young bride should be blessed with children, the rising generation would never forget in their intercourse with those children that they had tasted their mother's wedding cake, and that the friendship existing between them now would be handed down from generation to generation. He concluded by calling for three cheers for the bride and bridegroom, which were responded to in such a manner as only Maoris can respond. The feast was then partaken of by the Maoris, and such quantities of beef, pork, potatoes, kumaras (to say nothing of over 100 lb. weight each of plum-pudding and cakes) fell before their united attack, that it made one imagine they were under oath to clear off the whole or die in the attempt. In the evening, the process of digestion having been aided by another war-dance, the usual gifts were freely distributed, and the majority departed to their homes, evidently on the best of terms with themselves and everybody else. A cricket match was got up by the Europeans in the afternoon, and, judging from the play, the pleasures of the previous night had not produced any enervating effects upon the players. As usual in such cases, the side scoring the greatest number of runs were declared the winners. About 10 o'clock the last remnants of the merry party left Mangawhare, and your correspondent gladly sought that rest so necessary before writing this article.—

NGAKIRIPARAURI VALLEY

(Could mean sad open area or path)

This place is just east of the Kaiwi lakes in the Valley and is near the Ngakiriparauri stream. Where the stream flows into the sea it is called 'Waihaupai'. Ngakiriparauri was a nightly stopover camp for the "Old People of Polynesian Origin" travelling to and fro from the Kaihu River to the Kaiwi Lakes and from Hokianga to Mangawhare by way of the old Kaihu River trail.

While out hunting for pheasants in my youth I discovered in the Ngakiriparauri Stream Valley the old site for the following church. There were grave sites evident back then. My Dad said there had been a small settlement there but most were wiped out by the Epidemics (measles and flu) of the European of 1893-1920: Lovey Te Rore from Kaihu said there were about 100 people living there during the height of the Kauri Gum Industry. Many Maori came from outside to search for the elusive Kauri Gold (Gum) hence by the year 1900 we get a mixture of Hapu and Iwi from all over Northland now living in this district.

CHRISTIANITY COMES TO THE VILLAGES OF THE KAIHU VALLEY

During 1880 a Catholic church (St Linus-Hato Rini) was built at Opanaki (Kaihu) this is said to have been in the Ngakiriparauri Stream Valley lying between Kaihu and Kaiwi lakes, on land given by Chief Parore. This was replaced at Kaihu in 1893 with the church of St Agnes, and with a presbytery being built in 1901. A priest moved there in 1902 to look after the Northern Wairoa as a separate parish.

In areas where converts had been won, the missionary's next task was to build churches. This one photographed at a bush settlement at Opanaki (Kaihu) in Northland in the 1880s is typical of early places of worship. It was raised under the supervision of the Catholic priest James McDonald (centre with beard), who ministered to northern Maoris from 1880 until his death in 1890. The use of Maori materials and large wooden crosses was characteristic of McDonald's churches. His visits to each settlement were necessarily infrequent, however. In his absence, Maori catechists would lead the community in prayer, maintain religious instruction, and generally keep the Faithful faithful until the return of their priest.

APOSTLE OF THE MAORI

EARLY CATHOLIC PRIEST FOR NORTHLAND INCLUDING THE KAIHU RIVER VALLEY

After the Maori Wars, Father James McDonald was for some years practically the only priest for the Maori mission, and would visit from Hokianga to the Waikato. In the 1880's the Mill Hill fathers were invited to conduct the Maori mission in the Auckland diocese. During the following 50 years, stations were re-established in Northland, Bay of Plenty, Waikato, and the King Country, and St. Peter's College, Northcote, was founded for training Maori catechists. In the Wellington diocese only Sister Mary Joseph Aubert at Hawke's Bay was still respected and listened to by the Maoris. At her suggestion a missionary was appointed to Hawke's Bay in 1879. In 1881 this priest, Father Soulas, visited the Wanganui River and shortly afterwards re-established a station there. The Society of Mary began to send out priests again in 1884, and by 1887 there were again estimated to be about 1,000 Maori Catholics at Hawke's Bay, Otaki, and on the Wanganui River. From these small beginnings the Catholic Church was rebuilt, and at the 1961 census had 28,656 adherents out of a total Maori population of 167,086.

Rogers notes: 45 years ago while hunting in this area for pheasants I came across an old grave yard. It was pretty much surrounded by bush at that time. My Dad told me the people buried there were victims of the flu epidemics that had overtaken this small Ngakiriparauri Valley settlement towards the end of 1800 and the early part of 1900: Just recently I revisited this area and all that is left is one tombstone and a few hollows in the ground where those poor victims of the flu were buried. The bush has gone and the whole area is now in grass. All except one one were lifted and reburied at St Agnes Kaihu. The remaining grave stone is for 'Agnes Jane Downey-nee McFall who died out there in the wilderness in 1890. She has a grand view of the Maunganui Bluff.

KAIWI LAKES/OMAMARI

(Kai: eat. iwi: bone or people)

The Kaiwi Lakes and surrounding Omamari district have important associations with early Maori history.

Few written records are available on Maori settlement patterns around the Kaiwi Lakes. Early maps of the area record the remains of a pa on the main ridge South of Lake Kaiwi and former burial grounds at Promenade Point and Pine Beach.

During the early part of this century lakes Kaiwi, Taharoa and Waikere along with Shag Lake and an unnamed lake North West of Lake Waikere were known as the Rotorima lakes (five lakes). These lakes were important as a seasonal source of mahinga kai being the tuna/eel, Inanga/whitebait and Kewai/freshwater crayfish.

An aged old path connected to the path from the Hokianga to the Kaihu River at the Ngakiriparauri stream in the Valley just east of the Lakes and the natural pathway of the Ripiro beach provided access for hunters and gatherers.

During the purchase by Crown from Chief Parore Te Awha and his people in 1876: Parore stipulated that a reserve be placed around the lakes to allow his people to be able to hunt and gather for as long as they needed. This was highlighted in recent times during the Waitangi treaty claim for this area as follows...

“Why did Chief Parore Te Awha insist on this reservation”?

In the fourth statement of the claim, it is assumed that Parore Te Awha wanted to ensure that the area he defined for the Taharoa Native Reserve “be reserved, in perpetuity” to his descendants “as Wahi tapu, papakainga and mahinga kai for tangata whenua”

The claimant Robert Parore described Lake Kaiwi as: “a mahinga kai of some renown: a Wahi tapu used by tangata whenua from time immemorial down to the present day”.

The Kaumatua, Lovey Te Rore remembers: “I know there are Wahi tapu around the Kaiwi Lakes. There are both urupa (burying place) and Pa: two urupa on the lake shore: One at the Promenade point on Lake Taharoa. The other on the North Eastern shore of Lake Waikere: they must be very old urupa.

Ngakiriparauri is an urupa, to the East of the Lakes Taharoa and Waikere, outside the Domain, but fenced off from the surrounding farmland: not far from where the old track to Kaihu went. As far as I know, the area was named by the Waiariki people [of Ngawha] who moved down into the area under Parore. I feel that part of the reason for reserving the lake estate was to make provision for these people as well as for all people.

There is another lake in the area called Shag Lake: important to us because this is the lake which feeds the spring at Whangaiariki.

Use of the fishing resource has always been an important part of our relationship with the Kaiwi lakes”.

Lovey Te Rore believed in his heart that Parore “sought the reserve in order to preserve this valuable source of food for the hapu living in and around the lakes”. He had “never heard of him [Parore] or his descendants ever seeking to stop Te Roroa, Te Hokakeha, Waiariki or any of the other hapu from this area taking eels from the lake".

He believed Parore "saw himself as a trustee over the resource in favour of all the hapu who used it".

That was why Parore "wanted the land reserved and made inalienable". He thought Parore "intended to protect access to all of the lakes for tangata whenua. The reserve provided a sort of gateway into all of the lakes".

During the 1800's the Lakes district was at that time a major gum digging area. Five gum diggers huts were observed on the Western shores of Lake Kaiwi in the late 1870's.

In 1892 there was a small gum digging camp including a general store on the Eastern shores of Lake Taharoa. In 1908 a camp was established on the Eastern shores of Shag Lake. The largest gum diggers camp (Jacksons) was established near Johnsons Swamp South of Lake Kaiwi.

In the early 1900's an attempt was made by the Hall Brothers to drain Lake Kaiwi for gum recovery. A drain was dug from the present lake Kaiwi outlet to Johnsons swamp and the lake lowered by about 2 metres. At about the same time gum was being recovered from Lake Waikere with the aid of a diving bell.

In 1921 the Crown set aside a large area of land between Lake Taharoa and the West Coast for gum recovery operations. The swamps in the area were bored with hand augers in the hope of recovering gum chips. The operations met with little success and by the late 1920's most gum diggers had left the area.

Few signs remain of the gum digging operations around the lakes. A gum diggers hut from the shores of Lake Kaiwi is now situated at the Dargaville Maritime Museum.

The Crown in 1928 set aside 8.5 hectares on the Eastern shores of Lake Taharoa as a scenic reserve.

Lake Taharoa and the surrounding land were added to the scenic reserve in 1952.

In 1962: Lake Kaiwi and Lake Taharoa and the surrounding land were declared a recreations reserve to be known as the Taharoa domain. Administration and control of the reserve was vested in the Hobson Country Council in its capacity as the Taharoa Domain Board under the Reserves and Domains Act, 1953. Lake Waikere and the surrounding land were incorporated into the domain in 1968.⁵

'MAYEN' THE BIRTH TOWN OF ARNOLD BUHR

Even in Roman times, Mayen (Lat. Megina) was an important economic centre. From the end of the 3rd century up until the middle Ages, potteries operated here, and their products were traded and sold across Central Europe. During prehistoric times, nearby quarries were the sources of basalt to make millstones and tuff used to make sarcophagi. These sarcophagi were found buried with significant glass artefacts as grave goods. (Both classes of items are displayed in the Genovevaburg Museum in Mayen).

The name Mayen probably comes from the name Megina. Records from as far back as 847 show this as a designation of the town; it was adapted by the Romans from the Celtic word magos, meaning field. In the 8th century the legend of Genoveva of Brabant, names Mayen as the seat of government of Duke Siegfried of the Pfalz.

Mayen received its first official recognition in 1041, and was granted Town Status in 1291 from Rudolf I von Habsburg, at the same time as Bernkastel, Welschbillig, Montabaur and Saarburg. Mayen is possibly linked to the town of Maifeld, which lies a short distant to the south-east, since Mayen was called the capital of the Meiengau in the middle Ages.

During the Second World War, in particular during the allied forces air attacks of 12 December 1944 and 2 January 1945, approximately 90% of the town was destroyed. After the war and following a special referendum which addressed costs of rebuilding, the people voted to rebuild the town.

Up until 1973, Mayen was the District Centre of the Mayen District (with number-plate code MY). After 1973, the district administration was moved to Koblenz and the District was renamed Mayen-Koblenz District with the new number-plate code of MYK; Koblenz kept its own code of KO.

TIMELINE THROUGH HISTORY

500-400 BC -Teutonic ancestors inhabit south Sweden and north Germany

THE THIRTY YEARS WAR

The Thirty Years' War was a series of political and religious wars that lasted from 1618 until 1648. They were mainly caused by the political rivalry between Catholic and Protestant princes in Germany, and the interest of foreign powers in German affairs.

CONGRESS OF VIENNA

Vienna, the political and cultural center of Europe, was host to a conference of the major European powers at the end of the Napoleonic Wars. The negotiations at the Congress of Vienna, which lasted almost nine months during 1814 and 1815, had the formidable objective of partitioning the nations of Europe in the wake of Napoleon Bonaparte's turbulent military campaign. This task was accomplished on June 8, 1815, by the Treaty of Vienna. The dominant members in the conference were the major victors of the war: Russia, Prussia, Austria, and Britain. However, delegates from a host of other powers were present, including Sweden, Denmark, Spain, Portugal, Bavaria, Saxony, and the Papacy, among others. Although a defeated power, France was still a powerful one that remained capable of quickly raising a large army and consequently, it was represented at the Congress.

KING FREDERICK

In 1152, the German princes elected as their king, Frederick Barbarossa, whose name means Red-Beard, and who was from the House of Hohenstaufen. Frederick considered it his mission to reconstruct the German monarchy, and aimed to harness the new feudal forces of the age to his advantage. Thus, Frederick encouraged the princes of the realm to expand their own power and privileges at the expense of lesser lords. At the same time, he forced the princes to recognize his lordship over the entire kingdom. In essence, Frederick made the ducal princes his tenants-in-chief or feudal vassals.

GERMAN UNIFICATION

The movement toward German unification began in the first half of the 19th century. Once completed, its impact on the course of European history was immeasurable. The trend toward unification began with a power struggle between the two most prominent German states, Prussia and Austria, each seeking to control a unified Germany. Prussia eventually emerged victorious and became the dominant state in the unified Germany.

EARLY ORIGINS

As far back as 500 BC, the north central region now known as Germany was once occupied by the Celts and at its northern reaches Teutonic tribes. By 113 BC, German tribes began to invade along the Mediterranean in 113 BC, the Romans started their campaigns to push these Germani back. Their efforts against the Germanic tribes included many successful campaigns under the Roman general Gaius Marius, and then later by Julius Caesar in 55 and 53 BC.

BAVARIA - EARLY ORIGINS

Bavaria, which was a part of the Roman Empire until the 5th century, was named after the ancient tribe of the "Bajuvaren", who settled in the region after the period of Roman occupation. In the 6th century, the German territories were inhabited by Saxons in north central Germany, East Franks along the lower Rhine, Thuringians between them, Bavarians along the middle Danube, and Swabians between the upper Rhine and Upper Danube and along the Northern Alps. In the 9th century, the Frankish Emperor Charlemagne incorporated Bavaria into his Empire despite the heroic attempts at resistance made by the Bavarian Duke Tassilo.

THE RHINE - EARLY ORIGINS

An area which surrounds the Rhine River, one of Germany's most vital waterways, the Rhineland is renowned for its agricultural and industrial wealth. The Rhur Valley in the North is one of the world's most heavily industrialized areas and the vineyards of Mosel in the South have produced wines that are internationally acclaimed. The "Romantic Rhineland" has been immortalized in numerous ancient folk songs and fables. The region was occupied by the Romans, who founded many of the region's beautiful and historic cities as Roman settlements. After the fall of the Roman Empire, barbarian tribes conquered the German provinces and the Franks dominated the Rhineland. Nevertheless, the Rhineland was again brought under Germanic rule when Charlemagne, the greatest of the medieval kings, brought the barbarian tribes under the central order of the Holy Roman Empire.

WESTPHALIA

Westphalia, which means western plain, is the contemporary Bundesland, or state, of Nordrhein-Westfalen. After the fall of the Roman Empire in the 5th century, the Saxons inhabited the territories in north central Germany. Westphalia was a part of the old duchy of Saxony, which included most of the land between the Rhine and the Elbe between the 9th and 12th centuries. In the 9th century, the Frankish Emperor Charlemagne incorporated Saxony and the other German duchies into the Carolingian Empire. Charlemagne's conquest brought temporary unity to the duchies, but the collapse of the Carolingian Empire loosened these bonds of common order. Tribal consciousness and local particularism fought all centralizing influences until the late 19th century.

At present, Westphalia, which means western plain, is the contemporary Bundesland or state of Nordrhein-Westfalen. The state of Nordrhein-Westfalen was formed in 1945 largely from the Prussian provinces of the Rhine and Westphalia. Until the Napoleonic conquest, the area was divided among numerous small powers. After the Congress of Vienna ended the Napoleonic Wars, the region was granted to Prussia.

KING OTTO I

Considered the Charlemagne of Germany, Otto I (936-73) was only twenty-four years old at the time of his accession, but he was already a king in conduct and facility. It was through his canny state-craft and iron wills that Otto I became the first Holy Roman Emperor and earned the appellation Otto the Great.

PRUSSIA

At the end of the 15th century, in the glorious period known as the Renaissance, the German states in the Holy Roman Empire lacked strong, unified central governments and local nobles or small political units fragmented political authority. Local powers, such as cities, nobles and princes, remained autonomous and prevented the Holy Roman Empire from utilizing its resources and organizing itself like the new monarchies in the other European states. At the same time, the population was rising and trade was increasing.

REFORMATION

The Protestant Reformation was a momentous event in human history. Initially, the Reformation was a 16th century religious movement aimed at reforming abuses in the Roman Catholic Church. During the late Middle Ages, people began to express their dissatisfaction with some of the beliefs and practices of the Catholic Church. In particular, many people were against the selling of indulgences, which allowed people to "buy their way out" of being punished for their sins after death.

LOWER SAXONY

Lower Saxony, which includes most of the land between the Rhine and the Elbe rivers and is composed of the regions of Brunswick, or Braunschweig, and Lueneburg, was originally part of the old duchy of Saxony. The duchy of Saxony was in existence between the 9th and 12th centuries.

BACKGROUND

Switzerland was originally inhabited by a Celtic population, who were named Helvetians by the Romans. Between the 3rd and 5th centuries, the Alemannen tribes swept down from the north and conquered the northern and eastern part of Switzerland. The southwestern part of Switzerland was ruled by the Burgundians, who had settled in France. In the 6th century, the Franks took control of the part of Switzerland that was part of the duchy of Swabia. The smaller south-western portion of the country remained under Burgundian domination at this time. The Burgundian Swiss spoke French, a language division that remains today.

TEUTONIC KNIGHTS

The Teutonic Knights was a military and religious order that was founded in the late 12th century by German merchant crusaders. During the Third Crusade, in about 1190, German pilgrims to Palestine organized the Teutonic Knights for the defense of the roads to Palestine. They expanded their territories eastwards and supported their colonization by building fortresses as they moved. Except for some church territories, the Knight's Empire stretched from Prussia to Estonia on the Baltic coast. In 1198, the Teutonic Knights became an order of knights that was confined to Germans of noble birth. The style of the Order also became increasingly military. In 1229, the knights embarked on an extensive campaign in Prussia. After the conquest of this German territory, they transferred their headquarters from Transylvania (Rumania) to Prussia, where they became the armed vanguard of the German eastward expansion.

WEST PRUSSIA: BRIEF HISTORY

West Prussia was situated on the Vistula River, between Brandenburg-Prussia and East Prussia. Similar to East Prussia, West Prussia was originally a Prussian territory under the duchy of Pomerellen, but it was incorporated into the Empire of the Teutonic Knights, in 1309. The Teutonic Knights, whose Empire stretched to the land of Estonia to on the Baltic coast, were a military and religious order of German nobles. The knights built several fortified castles, the most famous being Marienburg which was the seat of the Knights Hochmeister, or grand master. In the Teutonic Knight's Empire, the tribes were converted to Christianity.

SWABIA – DEFINED

Swabia, which was a medieval dukedom, was located in southwestern Germany. In the 1st century, Swabia was settled by the tribe of the Sueben who came from central Germany and drove the Celts to Gaul (France). After the fall of the Roman Empire, the Germanic Alemans from the north and the Bajuwaren from the east entered the region. These tribes were in turn defeated by the Franks under Clovis in 496.

EARLY ORIGINS

Switzerland was originally inhabited by a Celtic people, who were named the Helvetians by the Romans. After the fall of the Roman Empire, Switzerland was overrun by the Alemannen, Burgundian and Frankish tribes. In the 9th century, it was divided between Swabia and Burgundy, but the territory was reunited in the 11th century as a part of the Holy Roman Empire.

DEATH FROM POISONING.

FATALITY AT KAIHU.

[BY TELEGRAPH.—PRESS ASSOCIATION.]

DARGAVILLE. Saturday.

The deceased's wife and family, with the exception of one child, are on a visit to the south. It is stated that the deceased told this child to go to a neighbour's, and that he was subsequently found to have taken poison. He died soon after.

There are nine children in the family.
